He amused the daughter of a hundred kings greatly; he could mimic her ex-Ministers, and find endless sallies of sarcasm at all the other monarchs who did not visit with Alfonso the Twelfth's mamma. He would make his little throat boarse of a morning with mimicing the speeches of Castelar, and would even atretch his body to undue length in order to imitate the walk of stately Figueras. He was the slyest of little men. Nobody suspected him, and accordingly in his visite "to-look-after his property" -- a field in the neighbourhood of Aranjuez-he managed to pick up a good deal of usaful gossip, and to do not a little of that plotting which eventuated in the recall of Alfonso and the return of Isabella to her ungrateful subjects. But the dwarf stayed behind. The King put his veto on this plotting little bit of property accompanying his respected mother. All the Spanish Kings had kept dwarfs, but no King kept one now, and the youthful ruler was not to be singular.
